Microsoft hat versagt: Analyse zum Rückzug von Windows 10 1809 und Server 2019

Am 2.10. begann Microsoft mit der Veröffentlichung von Windows 10 Version 1809 und Server 2019, stoppte sie aber nach Problemen. Und bemerkte weitere Fehler.

"Based on that feedback, we are making an important change to Nano Server. This next release will focus on making Nano Server the very best container image possible. From these changes, customers will now see the Nano Server images shrink in size by more than 50 percent, further decreasing startup times and improving container density. As part of this effort to focus on containers, we will be removing the functionality for infrastructure-related roles."

Microsoft greift Linux an

24.10.2000 | 17:51 Uhr | Stefan Willeke

Artikel empfehlen:

Microsoft nimmt Linux aufs Korn. In einer eigentlich witzigen Anzeigenkampagne mit einem mutierenden Pinguin orakelt der Windows-Hersteller in Kleinschreibung "ein offenes betriebssystem hat nicht nur vorteile". Das Motiv ist auch im Internet zu sehen.

For the first time ever, Microsoft will distribute its own version of Linux

"After 43 years, this is the first day that we are announcing — and will be distributing — a custom Linux kernel," said Brad Smith, Microsoft's president.

Linux now dominates Azure

The most popular operating system on Microsoft's Azure cloud today is -- drumroll please -- Linux.

Three years ago, Mark Russinovich, CTO of Azure, Microsoft's cloud program, said, "[One in four \[Azure\] instances are Linux.](#)" Then, in 2017, it was 40 percent Azure virtual machines \(VM\) were Linux. Today, Scott Guthrie, Microsoft's executive vice president of the cloud and enterprise group, said in an interview, "it's about half now, but it varies on the day because a lot of these workloads are elastic, but sometimes slightly over half of Azure VMs are Linux." Microsoft later clarified, "about half Azure VMs are Linux."

Endgültiges Aus für LiMux: Münchener Stadtrat setzt den Pinguin vor die Tür

Microsoft kann nach 14 Jahren Auszeit in München wieder voll "fensterln". Mit der Mehrheit der großen Koalition hat der Stadtrat endgültig beschlossen, bis 2020 wieder auf Windows umzustellen und den Ausflug in die Linux-Welt zu beenden.
